Mayor's Column

"I hope you know we had a hard time." These are the words I used, quoting from a speech I had heard, at the opening of the ground breaking for the new replacement airport a couple of years ago. Well, the opening day of this great new facility is finally here after nearly twenty years of hard work and a lot of effort by numerous individuals. At times it seemed that it may never happen or that there must be some unseen force working against its success. Today and for the foreseeable future it will be a force for good for both the flying public and the general aviation enthusiast. The realities of today and the possibilities for the future hold great promise as we continue to expand. This site has been used for many recreational purposes over the last several decades, some of which have been a shooting range, a drag strip, a remote model flying field, a motocross track, and a practice flying field. It was built before our existing airport and served to train many airmen including my father, Eldon McArthur, who just celebrated his 90th birthday. My generation used it for hunting rabbits and drag racing and I even landed a plane or two on the old runway. It brings many fond memories to mind as I am sure it will for many generations to come. It is the hope and vision of many past, present and, I am sure, future mayors and city councils that it will bring large and expanded economic benefits to St. George and the surrounding area. As you will see in this edition of "Inside St. George" it is five times as large as our present airport. The runway is twice as wide and a third longer with the potential to be 11,000 feet in length which is as long as any in the country. Everything about the replacement airport is a big upgrade to what we now have. Upon approaching the building from the front, notice the stained glass portal above the entrance depicting a canyon and the similarities in the architecture of the building that ties it to the Town Square. Notice the curving walls of the main hall and the dark to light bands of paneling ascending upward to the ceiling that remind one of the many slot canyons that make our area so popular. I know that everyone will be very impressed with the new terminal building, its artwork and furnishings. Here people will be able to send off loved ones and welcome them back in an atmosphere that is both beautiful and accommodating. Businesses and those wishing to show off the area and impress potential clients or entice companies to expand or relocate will have areas in the building to accommodate them. Ticketing, baggage claim, passenger secure areas, as well as public access areas are well placed with greeting and visiting space. The building is built to expand in all the areas that will need to be enlarged in the future as needed. I especially like the second floor that is for the public to view the entire airfield from end of runway to end of runway. Being a grandfather, I know others like me will love this area where we can show our children, grandchildren, and great grandchildren airplanes going and coming. Early on, the second floor was going to be office space for those who work on site, but as the City Council and I looked at the small area that had been set aside for the public, we all made the decision to open it up so it could accommodate a large group. It has been decided to name this area after one who has worked tirelessly to make the airport happen. You will have to come out to see who this special someone is. I would be remiss not to mention Mayor Karl Brooks and all the past City Council members since that time who have been involved intimately in the process. In fact, Mayor James Gray Larkin and those involved at that time had visions of the airport becoming an economic engine sometime in the future. Well, that time is now and we are blessed to have a dedicated staff and team under the direction of our City Manager Gary Esplin to carry out the wishes of all the Mayors and City Council members who have had the privilege of being involved. I am a religious man as many of you and feel we have been blessed immensely in this corner of the state and area of this country. We stand on the shoulders of giants who have paved the way for us in this day and age through vision and hard work when just eking out a living seemed an impossibility. I for one stand in awe at their fortitude, dedication, and reverence for this land we call DIXIE. A place I am happy to call HOME.

First Night to Twilight

In late December 1999 people throughout Southern Utah and around the world were talking about "Y2K" and fears were mounting about the "Y2K Bug." On December 31st, 1999 as cities in the far-east began to ring in the New Year with celebration instead of colossal computer crashes, anxiety was replaced by jubilation here at home and nearly 20,000 Southern Utah residents and visitors converged on Historic Main Street for the inaugural First Night 2000 St. George. Since that time, hundreds of families and individuals have adopted the New Year's Eve downtown celebration of the visual and performing arts as their own holiday tradition. For 11 years First Night St. George offered local talent an opportunity to perform for the home crowd in a variety of venues in downtown St. George. Both indoor and outdoor venues set the stage for everything from the Rock Docs to Max the Magician to Dance, Dance Revolution to entertain thousands of First Night patrons. Additionally, the fireworks display atop the Red Hill at the end of the evening has always rounded out the evening of revelry. That being said, the event has evolved from year to year and moved almost exclusively to the Town Square upon its completion in 2007. Well, the tradition lives on as we prepare to celebrate the beginning of a new decade in 2011 with one small exception, the name. Yes, that's right; you've probably already noticed the new name. You may be wondering why it changed. Some cities that once belonged to the First Night International organization have decided to modify their events somewhat to fit the community they serve. A good example of this is Salt Lake City making the switch last year from First Night to the new "Eve" celebration. In our case, we felt that the move would give us greater flexibility in the future as the event continues to evolve while still maintaining the same alcohol-free, family friendly environment we have provided at First Night. So, how did we come up with the name? Let's just say, it has nothing to do with vampires although I'm sure we'll inevitably see a few at the event this year. While brainstorming the name change the suggestion was made to call the event "Last Night." While it did make perfect sense, we felt that it was a little too obvious and too closely tied to "First Night." The word "twilight" became a topic of discussion because of its meaning. After some discussion the phrase "Twilight to Midnight" became the preferred name because of its symbolism and literal description. Yes, the event begins at twilight and ends at Midnight! Twilight to Midnight St. George 2011 will be held on Friday, December 31 at the St. George Town Square as well as the Pioneer Center for the Arts and Dixie Sunbowl. The event will feature a number of returning performances and activities like the Intermountain swing dance, Rock Band video game competition, Max the Magician, childrens and finale fireworks displays, and high energy performances on the main stage. New to the event this year will be Kerry Sharp the Clean Hypnotist, paper airplane toss U.S. record attempt, outdoor family dance, Zumba, We've Got Game Show, and announcement of SGU inaugural flight giveaway winners! Buttons and wristbands for the event will be $5.00 for adults (12 yrs +) and $4.00 for Children (3-11 yrs.) and can be purchased beginning Monday, December 6 at the following locations:

- Lin's Marketplace (St. George, Hurricane & Cedar City) • Boulevard Home Furnishings • Sand Hollow Aquatic Center
- St. George Recreation Center • St. George City Office Building • St. George Art Museum

The button/wristbands is required for all indoor venues and Twilight to Midnight activities. St. George Airport Manager

A New Era in Southern Utah Aviation

The vision of a new St. George Airport has been around now for over twenty years. As the population and commerce of St. George and the surrounding area enjoyed steady growth, City leaders envisioned a new facility that would overcome the design and operating constraints of our existing St. George Municipal Airport. Just as the City and greater metropolitan area was changing, so was the traditional aviation service community. Today our community airline service needs have changed from propeller and turboprop aircraft to the larger Regional Jet's as our air service demand continues to climb. My own association with the new St. George Airport began two and a half years ago when I became the airport manager for the City. I clearly remember the excitement of being a member of the team that would bring America's newest commercial service airport to life.

As you might imagine there are many steps involved in actually building a new airport. Land for the new facility must be acquired, a financial management plan developed, and of course we actually had to design a new airfield complete with all necessary facilities such as terminal buildings, fire stations, runways, taxiways, and navigational aids necessary to meet the community needs far into the future. All of this needed to be accomplished well before a single shovel full of dirt was turned for the new airport.

When I first saw the new airport site it consisted of approximately 1,200 acres of rolling high desert landscape situated on a mesa top south east of the City. This land area encompassed nearly five times the 260 acres of the existing airport, providing flexibility and room for growth to meet community needs for years to come. Since that first day nearly two and a half years ago, airport construction has moved at a phenomenal pace. Over four and a half million cubic yards of dirt and rock have been moved to prepare the site for construction. A new runway 9,300 feet in length was built, with the capability to extend it in future years to 11,000 feet, compared with the 6,000 feet of runway at our existing airport. Taxiways were constructed along with aprons and parking areas for smaller general aviation aircraft and corporate jets alike. A new airport terminal building of 33,000 square feet was designed and constructed that reflected the styles of the community and the surrounding canyon lands and desert vistas. A new Aircraft Rescue and Fire Fighting station was also built along with a varied assortment of airfield navigational aids and support facilities necessary to provide the new airport with a state of the art all weather instrument landing system. Today the new St. George Airport is ready to open its doors and begin a new era of serving the traveling public of southern Utah.

Operationally, this new facility can accommodate regional jets and others as large as the Boeing 737 and A-320 Airbus immediately. In future years with runway strengthening, it will be possible to accommodate even larger aircraft as the market warrants. With nearly a thousand more acres to grow into than the existing facility, we see the capability to cultivate growth in nearly all facets of aviation services to the community from smaller aircraft and services up to the larger airline and transport aircraft.

As we prepare to dedicate the new airport we also turn our attention to the transition of services and tenants from the old airport to the new. Arrangements have been made for moving the airlines, rental car companies, the Fixed Base Operators, aviation service providers and private hangars to the new airport over the next several months. A joke making the rounds these days as we plan for this move is "the last person leaving the old airport for the new, needs to turn out the lights and bring the flag". Indeed we are planning to do just that. Early on the morning of January 13th, 2011, we will literally turn off all the lights, decommission all of the instrument approaches, shut down all operations, and close the existing airport. One minute after that moment we will turn on all of the systems for the new facility, and the new St. George Municipal Airport will be officially open, ushering in a new era in aviation for southern Utah.

SkyWest Airlines: A Chronicle of Perseverance

inside stuff

The story of SkyWest is the stuff that St. George dreams are made of. Founded by Dixie local Ralph Atkin under the premise of providing reliable air service between St. George and Salt Lake City for local business passengers, the airline launched its first flight with a six-passenger Navajo piper aircraft in 1972. That first year, SkyWest carried a whopping 256 passengers. At the same time, the city was undergoing a transformation of its own, and a foundation for progress was being laid in the dry red-rock roots. From those humble beginnings was borne an airline that now carries more than 21 million passengers a year throughout North America. A burgeoning company worth more than $2 billion today, SkyWest's impressive fleet of nearly 700 aircraft operate thousands of flights each day – and the company that remains one of the most profitable airlines in aviation history still calls Utah's Dixie its home.

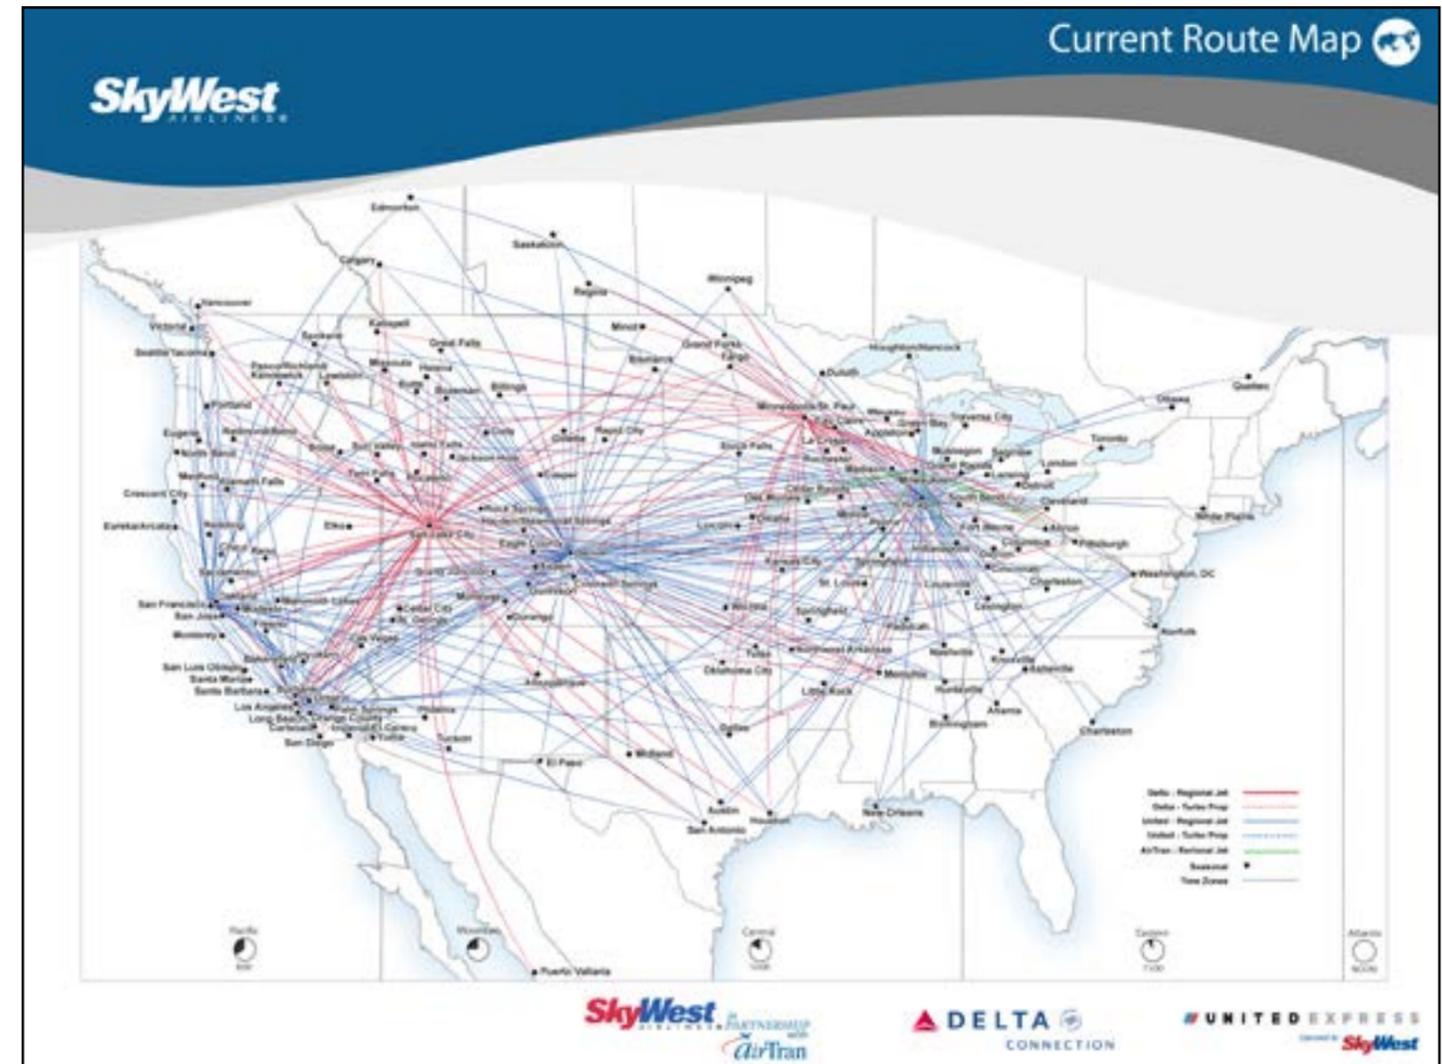

Since that first flight nearly 40 years ago, SkyWest has maintained its basic core values – a commitment to hard work, excellent customer service, and reliability. SkyWest has been named the Regional Airline of the Year twice by Air Transport World; Best Managed Regional Airline in the World; the Department of Transportation's Number One On-Time Airline four years in a row; and the World's Fastest Growing Regional Airline – among other prestigious titles. But the accolades are simply a reflection of the values common to St. George – hard work and a commitment to providing the best service possible.

It's no secret that a community's air service is a key driver of economic development. Since its inception, SkyWest has understood the necessity of business access to allow continued growth in St. George. With its headquarters based locally, the company provides more than 600 stable local jobs, making it a key employer in the area. SkyWest Airlines and SkyWest, Inc. are also proud to employ nearly 3,300 employees at various stations and facilities throughout the state of Utah. SkyWest, Inc. has repeatedly been named one of Utah's Top 100 Growth Companies by the MWCN committee of Utah, and remains a major payroll force both in the local economy and in the greater state economy.

SkyWest understands that work is an extension of life, and its local employees are active participants in the community. SkyWest partners with the City of St. George and Dixie each year to host the annual Mini Indy, a charity racing event that brings businesses from all over the world to St. George to raise money for United Way Dixie. In its ten years, the event has raised more than half a million dollars locally. In 2010, the airline hosted a leadership event to build and donate bikes to local children in need, in partnership with the Family Support Center. The efforts of more than 100 leaders provided shiny new bikes to more than 20 St. George children. Add KONY Coins for Kids contributions, local volunteer efforts and donations, and it becomes clear that SkyWest and its people offer much more than unparalleled air service to the St. George community.

And it doesn't stop there. SkyWest employees across the country continually participate in the communities where they live and work. In 2005, SkyWest employees donated $40,000 to Tsunami relief with a company match, they donated more than $202,000 for Hurricane Katrina Relief, and most recently in 2010, SkyWest donated more than $184,000 to Earthquake Victims in Haiti.

Continuing the airline's commitment to providing the best possible air service to its St. George passengers, SkyWest Airlines will introduce Utah's first-ever intrastate jet service between St. George and Salt Lake International Airport in January 2011 – a move made possible for the first time with the opening of a new, state-of-the-art airport. The enhanced customer flying experience onboard the 50-passenger Bombardier-manufactured Canadair Regional Jet 200 (CRJ200) will make St. George travel better than ever! Each 50-passenger CRJ200 is outfitted with state-of-the-art safety technology and will mean a shorter flight time between St. George and Salt Lake City. The new aircraft will also allow even more passengers to have access to hundreds of daily departures at one of Delta Air Lines' largest hubs in Salt Lake City – and allow more passengers than ever to enjoy the breathtaking Southern Utah experience. And in March 2011, SkyWest will provide even more options to its St. George passengers with United Express access to Los Angeles.

From humble beginnings nearly 40 years ago to unprecedented growth and success, SkyWest's ongoing dedication to the City of St. George remains as solid as ever. With access to Delta Air Lines and United Airlines from St. George, it's clear that St. George is poised for progress, and SkyWest remains a critical and dedicated player in Dixie.

In the Face of Adversity

THE PROGRAM

The new St. George Municipal Airport is the largest and most costly undertaking in the history of the City of St. George. Completion of this program is proof that when people rally behind a good cause they can accomplish anything. The airport program consisted of over 40 different projects that had to be coordinated for completion within a two-year period. To accomplish this daunting task, the City initiated a fast track process that required design and construction to proceed concurrently. "The pressure on everyone involved was intense and it never let up from the moment the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) gave us the green light," said City Manager Gary Esplin.

Selection of the airport site was governed by FAA criteria that required clear airspace six miles wide and twelve miles long. With our mountainous terrain, there were very few sites that qualified. That meant taking the best location available to meet airspace needs and then deal with the issues that come with it. As a result, there were hundreds of problems to solve along the way. The site the FAA approved had virtually no services, including inadequate power and access, no water, sewer, gas or communications systems. The 1,203 acre site also consisted of 30 different parcels of land the City had to acquire before proceeding. Soils on the site were complicated. They ranged from clays to sands and gravels to rock. The design and construction management effort was so complex that 15 different consulting firms were hired.

PBS&J did the airfield work; Creamer and Noble did the on-site roads, parking and utilities; Landmark Testing and AFEC provided quality control; Horrocks Engineers handled off-site roads; RS&H, Mesa Consulting and Campbell and Associates designed the terminal and the air rescue and fire fighting buildings. All of the design and construction management services performed by these and other firms was coordinated by Jacobs Engineering under the direction of the City. To save money, the City played a major role in project over-sight. Every department of the City took on supportive roles of one kind or another, including budgeting, accounting, finance, human resources, inspections, engineering, landscaping, security, public relations, water, sewer, fire protection, planning and legal services.

Currently, this is the only "greenfield airport" in the nation, which means it was built from the ground up. This is so rare that no one on the program team had prior experience developing a new airport. "It was a leap of faith. We knew what the end result needed to be, but charting our course came one day at a time. We knew we could do it because those involved possessed the skills, knowledge and ability to solve whatever problems we encountered," said Public Works Director Larry Bulloch. "The issues and challenges came at us incessantly, often on a daily basis. Each time we encountered a problem we would consult together to find a solution just in time to face the next problem," he added.

Weekly design meetings were held for a full year. Representatives from each firm participated in the exhaustive coordination process in order to keep the program on schedule. Early in the process, January 13, 2011 was established as the completion date. It was necessary to hit that date and keep overhead costs to a minimum. As a result, a baseline schedule was developed with critical milestones. Failure to meet any milestone would have resulted in missing the ultimate deadline. This put intense pressure on the entire team.

Construction began on October 1, 2008 with the grading and drainage project. It had to be complete by July 1, 2009 in order to start terminal construction. The terminal had to be complete in time to certify the airport for operation. Once the earthwork got underway, layout of the airfield commenced. There were times when airfield design decisions affected the earthwork and adjustments had to be made to the construction work. This was further complicated by the fact that leveling the site required placing the different types of soil in locations that would work. For example, the clays could not be placed where buildings or pavement needed to be. Once the terminal site was selected, it changed the grading plan which affected the schedule. At one point, Creamer and Noble and PBS&J worked through the night to complete the finish grading plans in order to be ready for terminal construction to start immediately. Earthwork on the terminal site was finished within days of the required milestone.

One thing we soon realized was the huge benefit of having local contractors on the job. They all had a personal interest in making the project a success. Their work would often affect each other. Instead of complaining, they cooperated and accommodated each other. At one time a sewer line being installed by Quality Excavation affected a water line being installed by Desert Hills Construction. Each adjusted their work schedule to accommodate the other. This type of cooperation was paramount to the success of the program.

As a result of notable commitment by hundreds of people engaged in the airport program, it was successfully completed on time and within budget utilizing the highest quality of work. Speaking of the effort, Mayor McArthur said, "It wasn't always smooth sailing from day to day on the project but everyone involved shared the overall goal and that was incredibly important. The result is a facility that our citizens can be proud of."

TERMINAL BUILDING

The terminal building has become the crown jewel of the Replacement Airport. It is truly impressive and was envisioned and developed with the intimate involvement and direction of Mayor McArthur and the City Council. The process began on March 20, 2008 when McArthur and the Council contracted with Reynolds, Smith and Hill, of Denver, Colorado, and Mesa Consulting Group, a local firm, to provide architectural services. On June 30, 2008 they embarked on a tour of a few selected airports across the country to gather ideas. Meetings were held with several airport officials. By the end of the journey, an exciting design concept had emerged. The building would be designed to reflect who we are as a City. The design concept included a main corridor with towering curvilinear walls and materials to give the feel of our local canyons; and colors to reflect the beauty of our vistas.

SGU REPLACEMENT AIRPORT HISTORICAL TIMELINE

Implementing the details of design and construction in the fast track process was a challenge. As the process progressed, new ideas were developed. A second story was added along with tall sandstone pillars and archways, which all brought a certain majesty to the building. A decision was also made to accent the building with local art to provide a taste of the southwestern Utah culture. Use of the space was given special attention. A greeting and garden area was designed to provide ample room for families wanting to reunite with family members and friends arriving to St. George. This space was furnished with a "living room" feel and includes water features, art and local plant varieties. The area has an open view to the secured arrival and departure area. It also has access to an upper level observation room which provides a panoramic view of the entire airfield where spectators can watch incoming and outgoing aircraft activity. The second story also includes a comfortable conference room with economic development and executive business meetings in mind. It will be available for visitors and local officials to conduct business conveniently without having to travel into town.

The terminal boasts of the latest technology, much of which we have done without in the past. In dealing with serious budget constraints, it was uncertain whether any extras could be afforded. The bids were structured with a full list of alternatives, the award of which hinged upon staying within budget. The economic downturn brought an unexpected bonus. Construction costs had dropped significantly so every "ornament" as they became affectionately known, could be added. The finished product will include a baggage carousel, a passenger loading bridge, desert style landscaping, electronically controlled doors and security cameras. The building has also been designed to accommodate future expansion.

Planning the terminal building from scratch has given the entire community a chance for input. Great ideas from the St. George Arts Council and SkyWest Airlines as well as professional interior decorators, has produced a fabulous facility that will meet community needs today as well as those of future generations. As one of the main entrances into our City, it will truly leave a lasting positive impression on those who visit the area.

FINANCING

One of the biggest obstacles to overcome was the financing. Early on, City Manager Gary Esplin observed, "We all agree that this is a very important project for our future; but, if we can't fund it, we can't have it." The entire City's budget was about $210 million. At that time airport engineers were estimating that the City would need over $200 million to build a new airport. The City simply didn't have the money and didn't know where they could get it. The City sought out the best financial consultants available who explored numerous financing models and innovative combinations of funding mechanisms and resources. Finally, after nearly a year of evaluating, Esplin took on the challenge himself. Using his 35 years of experience as the City's Chief Executive Officer, he rolled up his sleeves and went to work.

The first thing he did was cut costs. Re-engineering was performed for months to reduce the cost. The objective was to establish the "minimum opening day cost"; the absolute minimum improvements needed to get the airport built and operating. During the process, millions of dollars were cut from the program. Then the economic downturn came along and with it came a silver lining, construction costs dropped by nearly 50% in some cases. To achieve a balanced budget, every possible funding source was identified. Earlier, the FAA had indicated they could only fund about 30% of the program. However, through the program budgeting process, the City maximized every local dollar available.

Once the FAA could see that the City was fully committed to the project, they became a more willing partner. The program team engaged in extensive negotiations with the FAA. When it was done, the FAA increased their funding to a whopping 80% of the total cost. The budget was finalized at $160 million; $126 million from the FAA and $34 million from local sources. To secure the local share, the City obtained a $10 million commitment from Washington County and $12 million from municipal bonds. The balance came from a combination of available City funds. Finding a solution to the financial conundrum was nothing short of a miracle.

The next challenge was to keep the program under budget. Esplin assigned Deanna Brklacich, City Budget Manager, to track expenditures. Brklacich held regular meetings with the Program Management team to track costs. Every penny was accounted for and strict monetary controls were established to keep the program budget in check. Every change order required Esplin's personal review and approval. As a result, the new St. George Municipal Airport was completed $1,000,000 within budget.

A Real Economic Development

The futuristic vision for expanded air service in southern Utah has not lacked in scale or imagination. Remember when a privately financed and operated airport with two 200-foot-wide runways, one 16,000 feet long and one 12,000 feet long, that could handle "the largest aircraft in existence or conceived" was proposed for about 15 miles northwest of Cedar City? The proposed new facility would cost $1.5 billion and was projected to bring between one to two million guests a year from around the globe to southern Utah and serve as a major cargo distribution center. Perhaps you recall the VentureStar spaceport designated for a location near the Beaver – Millard County line where today propeller-like structures actually dominate the horizon. But in 2010, these turbines generate electrical power instead of thrusting aircraft into the great beyond. Then there was the proposed regional airport to be located just south of St. George in Arizona not far from where the new St. George airport is about to open. It, too, was to feature a large runway capable of handling huge wide-bodied jet aircraft that would come from various locations throughout the globe. And just a few years ago, developers led a very serious effort to locate a new airport either on the Mormon Mesa in Nevada or perhaps on the Beaver Dam Slope in Arizona to fill the Mesquite casinos with International visitors. Some even felt the best place to locate a new airport was on the Escalante Desert north of Enterprise.

Through the years, there has never been a shortage of ideas and concepts as to the best way to bring enhanced air service to the Tri-state area, including those who wanted to leave well enough alone by staying with the existing facility on the ridge above St. George. However, the population growth of the past four decades and the need for more and better employment opportunities requires the ability to enjoy jet service. The local market has grown to where airlines are now ready to bring the size of aircraft the area needs to strengthen and diversify the economy. That couldn't happen at the old airport. It required a lot of courage, determination and foresight on the part of local elected and appointed officials to pursue this nearly 20 year quest about to be realized when the first jet aircraft delivers passengers to the fantastic new St. George airport.

Already, the new facility is bringing dynamic economic energy to the area. Recently, city staff and the economic development council worked together to respond to a request for information received from a large, international aircraft manufacturer. The company's requirements could not have been met by the existing airport, but the new facility provided an attractive package that was submitted to the company. Recently, a group of corporate site locators from the eastern states made a several day stop in Washington County to learn what is driving the growth and excitement here. At the conclusion of their stay, the consensus was that the area has a lot to offer, but perhaps the most impressive, yet unrealized, asset here is the new airport. The site locators pointed out that many communities throughout the nation might equal the greater St. George area in features such as size, industrious workforce and quality of life, but few of them have a top notch, ultra-modern, jet-ready airport like ours!

NEW AIRPORT vs. OLD AIRPORT

- New SGU (4550 South Airport Parkway)
- 9,300 ft. (1.8 miles) runway expandable to 11,500 ft.
 - Built on 1,203 acres. Nearly five times the size of old airport
 - Two 50 ft. wide parallel taxiways (one partial and one full length)
 - Meets all FAA safety requirements
 - State of the Art Instrumentation Approach
 - Construction provided hundreds of local jobs in a difficult economic climate
 - Will accommodate regional jet aircraft, 737s and Airbus 319s
 - Access provided from the new Interchange two and Southern Parkway which is part of the proposed Dixie Regional Beltway
 - More property for General Aviation operations and Fixed Base Operators
 - Full ILS instrumentation and navigational aids will be available
 - Completely expandable to allow the City to meet future needs of the community and area
 - Thousands of adjacent developable acreage to accommodate economic development activities
 - Opportunities for other destinations and airlines if and when the market dictates
 - Great time to build because of low construction and material costs, with bids coming in at an average of 45% to 50% below 2007 estimates
 - Modern 35,000 sq. ft. terminal building. Terminal is expandable

New Airport Funding

- The total cost of the replacement airport is estimated at $159 million
- Approx. $123 million is coming from FAA grants. The City also received an additional $3 million in ARRA funds in 2009 for the terminal building
- Approx. $10 million is coming from Washington County through the use of Transient Room Tax
- Approx. $23 million is coming from City transportation and water/sewer funds
- No property tax, income or sales tax was used to fund city financial obligation for the new airport

- Old SGU (620 South Airport Road)
- 6,500 ft. runway length
 - Built on 274 acres
 - Not expandable due to mesa top location
 - 15,000 sq. ft. terminal building
 - No opportunity for airport related uses/industry adjacent to the existing airport
 - No opportunity for commercial jet service today or in the future
 - Does not meet current FAA safety requirements
 - Does not have up-to-date instrument approach
 - Property can only be used for airport purpose unless another acceptable to the FAA is available
 - The current airport will close once the new airport is open. General Aviation will have an additional 60 days to store aircraft at current airport
 - Limited vehicular access and parking

The Still Life Subject as Subject Matter by Charles Becker

city arts

The gorgeously glowing paintings of Charles Becker take us into the mysteries of the super real via the still life as subject matter. This genre goes back at least as far as Ancient Egypt. There are also beautifully preserved examples in fresco and mosaic from Ancient Greece and Rome, though so very many of older cultural artifacts have disappeared.

The more familiar still lifes were done generally by 17th and 18th century European painters. Among the important artists of still life in the north are two women, the Flemish painter Clara Peters (1595-c.1657) and the Dutch flower painter Rachel Ruysch (1663-1750). Jean-Baptiste-Siméon Chardin (1755-1842), a famous French still life painter, is notable for the simplicity and quiet of his scenes. Modern painters also explored this subject matter, especially Cezanne (1839-1906). In 1987, Pablo Picasso's still life "Sunflower" sold for $40 million, making it the most expensive piece of art ever sold at the time.

The still life genre consists generally of arranged examples of fruit, flowers, and game, possibly in or around a bowl, a cup, a pitcher, or other example from the kitchen or table and alludes quite directly to domesticity, the home and hearth. We see placed before us lovely temptations, even feasts. However, always there is the momentary allusion as a moment is captured, as the flora and fauna depicted will not and cannot last. Like us, they will grow old and deteriorate. The cycle of time lies behind the beauty of what is depicted.

Becker at times adds a dimension of mystery, trompe l'oeil, whimsy, and/or surrealism to his work. The silver chalice in the Blue Vase through which we can see the reflection of the painter is a device seen centuries before in Jan Van Eck's Giovanni Arnolfini's Wedding Portrait of 1434. Becker's ability to render reflectivity on silver, in particular, is quite extraordinary, as he shows us much in a very tiny area. The lovely lace, the droplets of moisture, the ripe luscious fruit, and the shining metals all exist in a shallow space in front of a backdrop notable for its dramatic simplicity. The placed items almost float before us as intimate miraculous visions of beauty for us to marvel at and enjoy.

Not surprisingly, Becker's work has been featured in Connoisseur, Southwest Art U.S., Art and Antiques just to name a few. As well he has done work for the Nestle Corporation in Lucerne, Switzerland, Eglise Saint Denis in Tourtour, France, Absolut Vodka in Stockholm, and Beringer Wines in California. He has exhibited widely in France, Sweden, Japan, Hong Kong and from New York to California.

We sincerely thank the Weinstein Gallery in San Francisco and Charles Becker for making this exhibit possible.
